Youngsters Turned Loose and Whoop Things Up in Big Tent.

With all the thrills of former years and some additional ones, Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East shows captivated another immense gathering last night out at Fifteenth and H streets northeast, the tent being as fully crowded as during the afternoon performance. The advance sale for this afternoon and tonight indicates that the amalgamated shows will do the biggest business in their history in Washington.

The "big show" is divided into seven-teen episodes and it would be difficult to single out any one of them as being more thrilling than the others. There is something doing from the moment that Col. William F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill," rides out in the rear of the mammoth pageant of Occidental and Oriental wonders and salutes the crowds, until the last gun is fired and the small boys disconsolately start homeward.

Indians, rough riders from many na-tions, cowboys, sharpshooters, lariat throwers, Oriental magicians and dan-cers, booming throwers and similar wonder-workers followed one another in rapid succession for nearly three hours. Colonel Cody did some marvelous shoot-ing while riding horseback and later Johnny Baker, an old favorite, gave his exhibition of sharpshooting feats.

Rough Riders On Scene.
No sooner had the echoes of the rapid-fire rifles died away than there was a diversity in the program and the rough riders would gallop on the scene. Cos-tacks, veteran members of the United States cavalry, cowboys and Indians kept the audience excited throughout by their reckless riding. About the only riders who didn't perform feats of dar-ing were those astride the meek camels and the lumbering elephants. The eleph-ants, by the way, were musically trained and joined in, though rather dis-cordantly, with the Cowboy Band at times.

Buffalo Bill has with him a number of female cowboys—if such a term can be used—and they rode and yelled and shot just the same as their male companions, all of their leats making a bit with the folks around the big tent.

It wouldn't be right to overlook "Mexican Joe" and his bunch of lariat throwers, nor "Joe Bailey," billed as the most wonderfully trained horse in the world, who waltzed, two-stepped, and did a familiar Oriental dance in truly realistic manner.

Play Push-Ball.
A game of push-ball between soldiers and the Indians, all horseback, resulted in a victory for the pale faces, much to the gratification of the American young-sters present.

Pawnee Bill's Far East aggregation would well be regarded by a number of Australian boomerang throwers, dancers from various countries, who went through strange movements to the music of strange instruments; acro-bats and strong men and mock reli-gious ceremonies.

In former years, Colonel Cody was the idol of the small boy, and of a num-ber of the grown-ups as well. He re-cieved an ovation each time he galloped around the "toped off arena," and he shot up things in the miniature battle of Summit Springs and chased a herd of buffalo over the stage ground and made himself doubly solid. Train ro-bberies, stage hold-ups, encounters be-tween cowboys and Indians, all having their place in real life in former days, were faithfully depicted last night by the Buffalo Bill actors.

Zouaves Drill.
Devil's Zouaves went through a number of perfect maneuvers, and af-terward scaled a high wall just to show their versatility.

Altogether the advance man didn't forget himself when he said it was "bigger and better" than ever, and everybody came away satisfied.

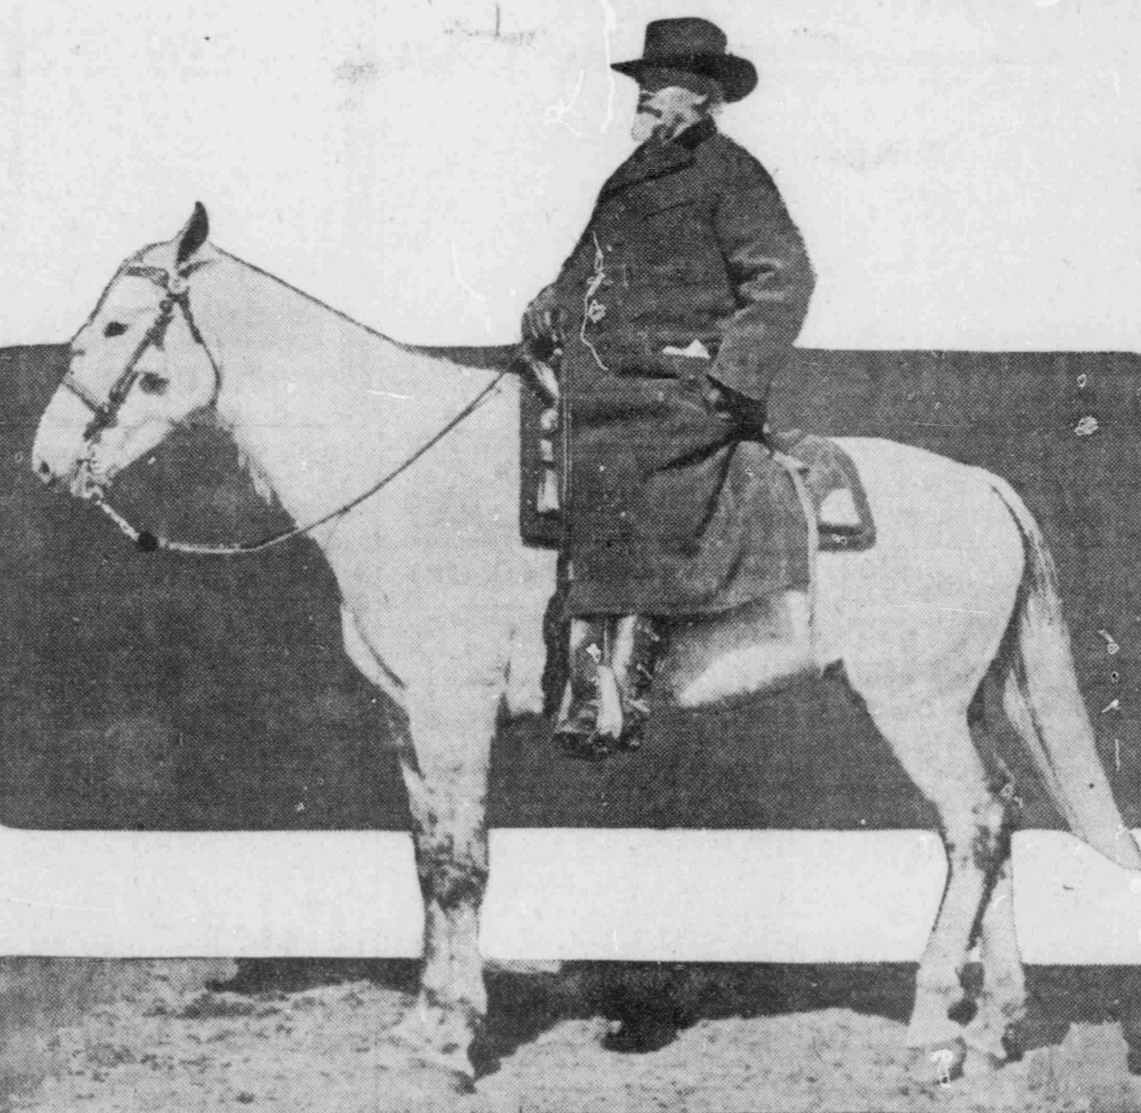

Colonel Cody dined with Gen. Nelson A. Miles yesterday, and in the evening General Miles and Gen. Eugene A. Carr, Colonel Cody's commander during the Indian wars, witnessed the performance, and were just as pleased as the other folks.

Newsboys On Hand.
Five hundred newsboys, as critical a bunch as ever watched the cavortings of a lot of cowboys, attended the Buffalo Bill Wild West Show as the guest of The Washington Times last night. The "newsies" had a section reserved all to themselves, and there wasn't a dull mo-ment in that part of the tent during the performance.

As before remarked, it was a most critical lot. Just so long as the red-skins, the dare-devil riders, and the various performers performed their manifold feats without a hitch, just so long was all the honor theirs—in the newsboys' row. But several times, it appears, an Indian brave didn't carry himself just as he might on horseback, or he missed fire, or something of the kind, and he was bombarded with a "back to the woods, redskin," or "a ter-ran' fishin' pole for yours. Yer can't ride, ner shoot."

Whoop Things Up.
The boys also seemed to think the Indians might have whooped up things

"SWALLOWED" TEETH
CAUSE GREAT SCARE

Bustleton Girl Sure They Are Lodged in Stomach, but Later Finds Them in Seam of Her Dress.

PHILADELPHIA, June 1.—Driving at high speed to save the life of his ser-vant girl, C. S. Sale, of the Bustleton pike, made a record-breaking run yes-terday from his home to the Frankford Hospital, a distance of several miles.

The young woman, whose life appar-ently depended on such quick action, is Elizabeth Nugent, of Bustleton, who met with a peculiar accident. While at breakfast she "swallowed" her false teeth, or at least thought she did. It was during a choking spell that the ac-cident happened. After she managed to recover her breath she told the folks what had occurred and showed them just where the teeth were located in her stomach.

After a hasty examination by the physicians at the hospital it was de-cided to put the x-rays on the woman in order to locate the exact spot where the teeth were. Everything was in readiness, and as the nurse was re-mov-ing the clothes from Miss Nugent the "swallowed teeth" fell to the floor. In-stead of swallowing them, as she thought, in coughing, they slipped out of her mouth and lodged in the seam of her dress.

A little bit more when it came to giv-ing their war songs and yells. They didn't like the soft-pedal arrangement some of the braves seemed to want to bring into play.

Buffalo Bill, however, got by the fearless 500 without a scratch, even though he did miss a few balls thrown high in the air, which he shot at while galloping full speed. Anything the old scout did was all right. The boys had other favorites, too, the fair feminine riders coming in heavy on their share of the applause.

It's doubtful if the big show was ever attended by a more enthusiastic and critical aggregation of juveniles.

BODY OF MRS. WOOD
NOT YET RECOVERED

Only Victim in Burning of Launch "Tryto"—Injured
Resting Easily.

The body of Mrs. Carroll D. Wood, of 309 South Fairfax street, Alexandria, who was drowned in the Potomac near Marshall Hall late yesterday afternoon, after she had jumped from the burn-ing power boat "Tryto," has not been recovered. Efforts are still being made by friends from Alexandria to find the young woman's body and the search will be kept up.

Carroll D. Wood, husband of the drowned woman, who was with her in the "Tryto" when the flames made her leap to her death, today is nursing some severe burns on his arms and neck, and Mrs. Morgan Moore, of 599 1/2 South Fairfax street, is suffering from a badly scorched face. Morgan Moore, her hus-band, and Mr. and Mrs. James Wells, of 407 South Washington street, the other occupants of the launch, today bear no marks of their terrible struggle.

A leaky gasoline tank probably is responsible for the death of Mrs. Wood and the burning of the two others.

Francis Butterfield, of Congress Heights, who was cruising on the river in a power boat, performed heroic ser-vice in rescuing those who had plunged overboard. He drew one after another until all hope was given up of saving Mrs. Wood.

"We had turned back to try to reach Marshall Hall before our fuel was ex-hausted," said Mr. Wood, speaking of the accident. "We had almost reached the wharf at Marshall Hall, and were in midstream when there was an ex-plosion and some one yelled 'jump.' My wife, who was sitting in the stern, was panic stricken and went overboard."

"At the time I was busy trying to quiet the others and did not notice what had happened until I saw Morgan Moore in the water trying to save my wife. Mrs. Wells about that time jump-fol-lowed. Mrs. Moore tried to jump overboard, but I grabbed her, and held her on the stern of the boat. I think we were all overboard at one time."

GUNNESS STORY TOLD TO GET HIS DISCHARGE

American Sailor Now in Christiana Declares He Con-fessed Aiding Indiana Murderess So Captain Would Let Him Leave Ship.

CHRISTIANA, June 1.—James Small, the sailor who created a sen-sation here by confessing that he aided Mrs. Gunness, the La Porte, Ind., woman, in committing several mur-ders and killed her and her children, but who so soon as he was discharged from his ship declared there was no truth in the statement, was surren-dered at the United States consulate here today. He will be sent to America on June 4, but not for any connection with the Gunness murder.

It is now generally believed that he knew nothing more about the La Porte matter than he read in the newspapers, but that he took an unique way to secure his discharge from a ship which had proven uncon-genial.

He admitted at the consulate today that he told his story to his captain so that the latter would conclude that he was insane and land him.

The consul has secured passage for him on the Scandinavian-American liner Helig Olav in the usual manner for stranded sailors.

Small talked rationally today. He declared that he is a native of Illes-borough, Me., and that he has been a sailor all of his life. He insisted that he never was in Indiana or even heard of Mrs. Gunness until he read of the case. As there is a possibility that he may be insane, he will be watched while en route to the United States.
